Paws is dreaming.
Dreaming about rabbits.
He used to chase them.
Now he dreams about them.

Paws is glad that Edward is reading.
That means he doesn't have to go out.
They go out two times a day.
That's more than enough for Paws.

“How are you, Paws?
Should we go outside?”
Paws wags his tail. Not too hard,
only hard enough for Edward to see it.

Paws is dreaming again.
About chasing rabbits.
And cats. And cars. And planes.
Mostly rabbits.

“Wake up now, Paws. We’re going for a walk.” Edward is ready.
Paws doesn’t need to go out. But he comes along anyway.
Edward could use some fresh air, thinks Paws.

The air outside is chilly.
Paws knows where they're headed.
His gait is nice and easy.
Paws no longer feels the urge to run.
He has run enough.

Sometimes Edward meets someone he knows.
Paws likes that. It means he gets to rest.
