What's the Deal with the Climate?

Green Stuff – About Nature and the Environment and Stuff Like That has stayed on the bestseller lists since its launch, an achievement crowned with a shortlisting for the Brage Prize. This sequel delves deep into the ongoing climate crisis, taking a closer look at what is about to happen, why it's happening, what the consequences will be, and what can be done about it. It's heavy, complex stuff, but handled in a smart, funny, easy to understand way by two masters of their craft. Yet again the authors show up as cartoon characters – in a longer, brand new comic.

Jenny Jordahl has a unique and playful style, and Ole Mathismoen has reported on climate and environmental issues as a journalist for more than 30 years. The two appear as characters in the comic strips which makes complex and sometimes difficult topics more accessible to the reader

Ole Mathismoen and Jenny Jordahl (illustrator)

Ole Mathismoen (b. 1961) is Norway's most highly regarded journalist in the field of environmental issues. He has written several books on the topic, one of which was nominated for the Brage Prize. He has also received the Bergesen Prize, which is an honorary award for people who have done outstanding work in fields that concern the general public.

Jenny Jordahl (b. 1989) is an established illustrator, cartoonist, blogger and author of several books including Women in battle, which is sold to 26 countries. Jordahl is educated from Oslo National Academy of the Arts. She is active on social media and has numerous followers on Instagram.
