Something inside something else

Think inside the box!

Have you ever considered that the world around you is full of containers, in all possible shapes and sizes? Many of those you see can in fact fit inside something else!

They are made from a world of materials.

Wood, clay, leather, stone and reeds were the first to be used. Later came paper, glass, china, rubber and plastic. Some containers are hard, some are soft. Some are transparent, some are opaque. Some are light, some are heavy. Some are strong, while some rather flimsy.

Rune Markhus (b. 1972) is educated at Westerdal's School of Communication. He has illustrated a number of award-winning books for children. Markhus grew up in Tysvær and now lives in Moss with his wife, two boys and their cat Solo.
