The Orange Plane

Dad is traveling to the wilderness by seaplane. He gathers his children around him and tells them he's come up with a very good idea: he's going to drop ten oranges through the plane's window onto Grandma and Grandpa's property when he flies over it! He tells the children to look for them until he comes back home.

The children can't wait to look for the oranges! They watch to try to see where they land when the plane flies over their house – but they don't see anything falling! They decide to start looking for them anyway. The children look for the oranges for a long time and start to wonder whether Dad is just playing a trick on them.

Marit Kirsten Anti Gaup, Malle Rimmel (ill.)

Author Marit Kirsten Anti Gaup writes books about children's everyday life and what the children experience in their local environment – while also incorporating elements from the Sámi culture into her stories, such as strange events, myths and superstitions, invisible helpers etc. The author has a very rich Sámi cultural background.
