Anders Moe

Scar Tissue

A modern Scandinavian psychological serial-killer thriller, with an investigative partnership and escalating threats familiar to readers of The Chestnut Man by Søren Sveistrup.

Cold landscapes, psychologically complex murders, damaged investigators and morally uncomfortable investigations.

Rooma Virak, 36, a Norwegian investigator, psychologically minded and fiercely committed to justice, is recruited into a secretive Nordic police unit, ENPO, Enhet for Nordiske Politioperasjoner, and paired with a Danish investigator, Brian Chort, 44. He is charismatic and exceptionally skilled at reading people, but after years inside ENPO has begun to lose faith in the work.

Each case brings Rooma and Brian closer — and further away from the people they thought they were. In this series, the investigators themselves are the long-form mystery. As their cases get darker, their methods become more dangerous and everything becomes personal.

Can Rooma identify a killer who never commits his own crimes?

Rooma Virak's first assignment with ENPO begins in Oslo and with the brutal assault of a young woman who has been stalked for months. When the police finally arrest the killer, Rooma realises they have caught the wrong man.
This is Rooma's first descent into the kind of darkness she joined the police to fight. She comes out damaged, but now has absolute trust in her partner. Brian Chort comes out with something more dangerous: Brian wants Rooma closer.
